- B. It uses the same key to encrypt plaintext as to decrypt ciphertext.
- C. It simultaneously creates ciphertext and a same-size MAC.

- D. It uses a Key that is double the size of the message which it encrypts.

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 97

What is an example of phishing?

- A. An attacker lures clients to connect to a software-based AP that is using a legitimate SSID.
- B. An attacker sends emails posing as a service team member to get users to disclose their passwords.
- C. An attacker checks a user's password by using trying millions of potential passwords.
- D. An attacker sends TCP messages to many different ports to discover which ports are open.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Phishing is a type of social engineering attack where an attacker impersonates a trusted entity to deceive people into providing sensitive information, such as passwords or credit card numbers. An example of phishing is when an attacker sends emails posing as a service team member or a legitimate organization with the intention of getting users to disclose their passwords or other confidential information. These emails often contain links to fake websites that look remarkably similar to legitimate ones, tricking users into entering their details.

Cybersecurity guidelines on identifying and preventing phishing attacks.

NEW QUESTION # 98

What is one way a honeypot can be used to launch a man-in-the-middle (MITM) attack to wireless clients?

- A. it runs an NMap scan on the wireless client to find the client's MAC and IP address. The hacker then connects to another network and spoofs those addresses.
- B. it uses ARP poisoning to disconnect wireless clients from the legitimate wireless network and force clients to connect to the hacker's wireless network instead.
- C. it examines wireless clients' probes and broadcasts the SSIDs in the probes, so that wireless clients will connect to it automatically.
- D. it uses a combination of software and hardware to jam the RF band and prevent the client from connecting to any wireless networks

Answer: C

Explanation:

A honeypot can be used to launch a Man-in-the-Middle (MITM) attack on wireless clients by examining wireless clients' probe requests and then broadcasting the SSIDs in those probes. Clients with those SSIDs in their preferred network list may then automatically connect to the honeypot, believing it to be a legitimate network. Once the client is connected to the attacker's honeypot, the attacker can intercept, monitor, or manipulate the client's traffic, effectively executing a MITM attack.

NEW QUESTION # 99

What is a reason to set up a packet capture on an Aruba Mobility Controller (MC)?

- A. The security team believes that a wireless endpoint connected to the MC is launching an attack and wants to examine the traffic more closely.
- B. You want the MC to analyze wireless clients' traffic at a lower level, so that the ArubaOS firewall can control Web traffic based on the destination URL.
- C. The company wants to use ClearPass Policy Manager (CPPM) to profile devices and needs to receive HTTP User-Agent strings from the MC.
- D. You want the MC to analyze wireless clients' traffic at a lower level, so that the ArubaOS firewall can control the traffic based on application.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 100

What is one of the roles of the network access server (NAS) in the AAA framework?

- A. It negotiates with each user's device to determine which EAP method is used for authentication
- B. It enforces access to network services and sends accounting information to the AAA server
- C. It authenticates legitimate users and uses policies to determine which resources each user is allowed to access.
- D. It determines which resources authenticated users are allowed to access and monitors each user's session

Answer: B

Explanation:

In the AAA (Authentication, Authorization, and Accounting) framework, the role of the Network Access Server (NAS) is to act as a gateway that enforces access to network services and sends accounting information to the AAA server. The NAS initially requests authentication information from the user and then passes that information to the AAA server. It also enforces the access policies as provided by the AAA server after authentication and provides accounting data to the AAA server based on user activity.

Technical literature on AAA protocols which often includes a description of the roles and responsibilities of a Network Access Server.

Network security resources that discuss the NAS function within the AAA framework.
