IAPP Certified Information Privacy Professional/Europe (CIPP/E) Sample Questions (Q15-Q20):

NEW QUESTION # 15

Which of the following countries will continue to enjoy adequacy status under the GDPR, pending any future European Commission decision to the contrary?

- A. Australia
- B. Norway
- C. Greece
- D. Switzerland

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 16

An entity's website stores text files on EU users' computer and mobile device browsers. Prior to doing so, the entity is required to provide users with notices containing information and consent under which of the following frameworks?

- A. E-Commerce Directive 2000/31/EC.
- B. General Data Protection Regulation 2016/679.
- C. Data Protection Directive 95/46/EC.
- D. E-Privacy Directive 2002/58/EC.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 17

Which of the following is an example of direct marketing that would be subject to European data protection laws?

- A. A charity fundraising event notice sent to an individual at her business address.
- B. A revision of contract terms conveyed to an individual by SMS from a marketing organization.
- C. An updated privacy notice sent to an individual's personal email address.
- D. A service outage notification provided to an individual by recorded telephone message.

Answer: B

Explanation:

According to the definition of direct marketing in the context of data protection law, it is personal data processed to communicate a marketing or advertising message. This includes messages from commercial organisations, as well as from charities and political organisations. Therefore, option D is an example of direct marketing that would be subject to European data protection laws, as it involves sending a marketing message by SMS to an individual. The other options are not examples of direct marketing, as they do not involve marketing or advertising messages, but rather information or service messages that are not intended to promote any product or service. ## NEW QUESTION # 19

Which of the following would MOST likely trigger the extraterritorial effect of the GDPR, as specified by Article 3?

- A. Personal data of EU residents being processed by a non-EU business that targets EU customers.
- B. The behavior of suspected terrorists being monitored by EU law enforcement bodies.
- C. The behavior of EU citizens outside the EU being monitored by non-EU law enforcement bodies.
- D. Personal data of EU citizens being processed by a controller or processor based outside the EU.

Answer: D

Explanation:

According to Article 3(1) of the GDPR1, personal data shall be processed in any member state only on the basis of a decision taken at a Union level that is binding for that member state, unless it is derogated from by national law. This means that the GDPR applies to any processing of personal data within the EU, regardless of where the controller or processor is located, as long as it is based on a decision made at a Union level that is binding for that member state.

Therefore, option B would most likely trigger the extraterritorial effect of the GDPR, as it involves personal data of EU citizens being processed by a controller or processor based outside the EU, which may be subject to a decision made at a Union level that is binding for that member state.

Option A would not trigger the extraterritorial effect of the GDPR, as it involves monitoring suspected terrorists, which is not considered processing under Article 4(1) and (2) of the GDPR1. Monitoring may fall under other legal frameworks, such as national security or counter-terrorism laws.

Option C would not trigger the extraterritorial effect of the GDPR, as it involves monitoring EU citizens outside the EU by non-EU law enforcement bodies, which may not be subject to any decision made at a Union level that is binding for that member state.

Option D would not trigger the extraterritorial effect of the GDPR, as it involves processing personal data of EU residents by a non-EU business that targets EU customers, which may not be subject to any decision made at a Union level that is binding for that member state.
