You introduce them to the invoice documents recognition rate report to obtain the invoice line recognition details.

In which three formats is this report available?

- A. Invoice Line Summary
- B. Invoice Line Details
- C. Invoice Header supplier summary

- D. Invoice Summary Details
- E. Invoice Header Details
- F. Invoice Header summary

Answer: A,C,E

NEW QUESTION # 52

Which reference data sharing method can you use for Payables Payment Terms when working with reference data sets in Payables?

- A. Assignment to multiple sets with common values allowed
- B. Assignment to multiple sets; no common values allowed
- C. Assignment to one set only; no common values allowed

Answer: B

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed In-Depth

In Oracle Fusion Applications, reference data sharing (also known as SetID) enables organizations to share common configuration data across various organizational units, such as business units, without unnecessary duplication. This approach streamlines maintenance and ensures consistency of reference data across the enterprise.

Payment Terms in Oracle Payables define the conditions under which a company pays its suppliers. These terms can vary between business units based on factors like regional practices or supplier agreements. To accommodate this variability, Oracle Payables employs a specific reference data sharing method for Payment Terms.

Reference Data Sharing Methods:

Assignment to One Set Only; No Common Values Allowed:

Each reference data object instance is assigned to a single set exclusively.

No sharing of values across multiple sets.

Example: Asset Prorate Conventions are defined and assigned to only one reference data set.

Assignment to One Set Only, with Common Values:

Reference data objects can be assigned to one set, but there's a common set whose values are accessible to all business units.

Example: Receivables Transaction Types are assigned to a common set that's available to all business units.

Assignment to Multiple Sets; No Common Values Allowed:

A reference data object instance can be assigned to multiple sets.

There's no common set; each set operates independently.

Example: Payables Payment Terms use this method, allowing each payment term to be assigned to one or more sets.

For Payables Payment Terms, the applicable method is "Assignment to multiple sets; no common values allowed." This means that each payment term can be associated with one or more reference data sets, but there's no overarching common set that includes all payment terms. This flexibility allows organizations to define payment terms specific to certain business units while also sharing others across multiple units as needed.

Practical Application:

Shared Payment Terms: If multiple business units operate under similar payment conditions, a single payment term (e.g., "Net 30") can be assigned to multiple reference data sets corresponding to those units.

Specific Payment Terms: For unique business units with distinct payment agreements, specific payment terms (e.g., "Net 15") can be created and assigned exclusively to the relevant reference data set.

This approach ensures that each business unit has access to the payment terms relevant to its operations without unnecessary proliferation of identical terms across the system.

NEW QUESTION # 53

As an Oracle Payables Subject Matter Expert, you are familiarizing yourself with Intelligent Document Recognition (IDR). After detailed review, you consider Adaptive Learning one of the most beneficial features of IDR. Adaptive learning increases the accuracy of invoice scanning and improves touchless processing. When users make corrections in the interactive viewer, each invoice edit trains the algorithms and improves future recognition.

Which is NOT a key consideration for Adaptive Learning?

- A. Adaptive Learning for Invoice Lines
- B. Sharing Adaptive Learning Between Environments

- C. Legal Entity Recognition from Invoice Document
- D. Adaptive Learning for Routing Attributes
- E. Bill-To Recognition from Invoice Document

Answer: E

NEW QUESTION # 54

Adaptive Intelligence (AI), integrated with Oracle Payables Cloud, supports sophisticated data science that drives early payment discount offers.

Which of these is NOT a feature of early payment discounts?

- A. Eligible discounts decrease on a sliding scale based on the supplier's discretion.
- B. The earlier the payment, the greater the discount.
- C. Variable annual percentage rate (APR), based on "days paid early," is used to determine the discount amount.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed In-Depth

Oracle Payables Cloud, enhanced with Adaptive Intelligence (AI), offers a feature known as Early Payment Discounts. This functionality enables organizations to optimize their cash flow by taking advantage of discounts offered for early invoice payments.

Key Features of Early Payment Discounts:

Variable Annual Percentage Rate (APR) Based on "Days Paid Early" (Option B):

The discount amount is calculated using a variable APR, which is determined based on the number of days the payment is made ahead of the due date. The earlier the payment is made, the higher the discount percentage applied.

Reference:

The Earlier the Payment, the Greater the Discount (Option C):

This principle aligns with the time value of money, where paying invoices earlier results in greater discounts. The discount decreases as the payment date approaches the invoice due date.

Clarification of Option A:

Eligible Discounts Decrease on a Sliding Scale Based on the Supplier's Discretion:

While the discount offered decreases over time, this scaling is typically predefined in the payment terms agreed upon between the buyer and the supplier, rather than being adjusted at the supplier's discretion on a case-by-case basis. The terms are set during the establishment of the early payment discount program and are systematically applied, ensuring consistency and predictability in discount calculations.

Therefore, Option A is not a feature of the early payment discounts as implemented in Oracle Payables Cloud with Adaptive Intelligence.

Once enrolled, a supplier discount is set and applies to all payments indefinitely, until supplier unsubscribes.
