VMware Cloud Foundation 5.2 Architect Sample Questions (Q49-Q54):

NEW QUESTION # 49

Given a scenario, which design decision is necessary to ensure smooth workload migration into a VMware Cloud Foundation (VCF) environment?

Response:

- A. Using VMware vSphere replication for seamless workload migration
- B. Configuring NSX to enable micro-segmentation of migrated workloads
- C. Setting up a shared storage infrastructure across all availability zones
- D. Ensuring that workloads are isolated in separate clusters

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 50

An organization is planning to expand their existing VMware Cloud Foundation (VCF) environment to meet an increased demand for new user-facing applications. The physical host hardware proposed for the expansion is a different model compared to the existing hosts, although it has been confirmed that both sets of hardware are compatible. The expansion needs to provide capacity for management tooling workloads dedicated to the applications, and it has been decided to deploy a new cluster within the management domain to host the workloads. What should the architect include within the logical design for this design decision?

- A. The design assumption stating that the separate cluster will provide complete isolation for lifecycle management
- B. The design implication stating that the management tooling and the VCF management workloads have different purposes
- C. The design qualities affected by the decision listed as Availability and Performance

- D. The design justification stating that the separate cluster provides flexibility for manageability and connectivity of the workloads

Answer: D

Explanation:

In VCF, the logical design documents how design decisions align with requirements, often through justifications, assumptions, or implications. Here, adding a new cluster within the management domain for dedicated management tooling workloads requires a rationale in the logical design. Option A, a justification that the separate cluster enhances "flexibility for manageability and connectivity," aligns with VCF's principles of workload segregation and operational efficiency. It explains why the decision was made- improving management tooling's flexibility-without assuming unstated outcomes (like B's "complete isolation," which isn't supported by the scenario) or merely stating effects (C and D). The management domain in VCF 5.2 can host additional clusters for such purposes, and this justification ties directly to the requirement for dedicated capacity.

NEW QUESTION # 51

Which two actions can be performed to troubleshoot VMware Cloud Foundation's NSX issues?

(Choose two)

Response:

- A. Verify network segmentation in the NSX interface
- B. Reconfigure the vSphere DRS settings
- C. Use the NSX troubleshooting tool to analyze logs
- D. Restart the NSX Manager service

Answer: A,C

NEW QUESTION # 52

When gathering requirements for a VMware Cloud Foundation deployment, which of the following should be prioritized to ensure a successful deployment?

Response:

- A. The customer's specific use cases and workloads
- B. The storage requirements for the SDDC
- C. The company's cloud preference and security policies
- D. A detailed assessment of current network hardware

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 53

Which two operations are managed by VMware Cloud Foundation Lifecycle Manager?

(Choose two)

Response:

- A. Managing software upgrades
- B. Backing up VMware Cloud Foundation components
- C. Automating the deployment of NSX
- D. Creating and managing VMs

Answer: A,C
