NEW QUESTION # 154

A financial institution is looking to improve their existing virtual environment with a focus on increasing security to protect sensitive data. The firm has a single data center and is concerned about lateral movement of threats within the network. They are particularly interested in utilizing VMware NSX to implement segmentation and adopt a Zero Trust security model.

Which of the following would be part of the optimal recommended design, utilizing a firewall?

- A. Implement NSX with Gateway Firewall with each application deployed on its own Overlay Network.
- B. Implement NSX with Gateway Firewall with the use of VLAN-backed virtual standard switch for network segmentation.
- C. Implement NSX with a Distributed Firewall with the use of VLAN-backed virtual standard switch for network segmentation.
- D. Implement NSX with a Distributed Firewall with each application deployed on its own Overlay Network.

Answer: D

Explanation:

- * NSX Distributed Firewall for Zero Trust Security (Correct Answer - B):
 - * NSX Distributed Firewall (DFW) provides micro-segmentation at the vNIC level to enforce Zero Trust policies.
 - * Each application runs on its own NSX Overlay Network, preventing lateral movement of threats.
 - * Application-specific segmentation ensures granular control and compliance with regulatory standards (PCI-DSS, GDPR).
 - * Incorrect Options:
 - * (A - Gateway Firewall on Overlay Networks):
 - * The Gateway Firewall controls North-South traffic, but DFW is required for East-West security.
 - * (C & D - VLAN-Backed Networks Instead of Overlays):
 - * VLANs are limited in scalability compared to overlay networks, reducing segmentation flexibility.
