NEW QUESTION # 118

The type of electric locking device that permits free mechanical egress from the protected side of the door is the:

- A. Delayed egress
- B. Electromagnetic
- C. Electric strike
- D. Vertical pin

Answer: C

Explanation:

An electric strike allows for remote electrical locking and unlocking while still permitting free mechanical egress from the protected (inside) side of the door. This is essential for life safety and code compliance, especially in commercial and public buildings.

A (Vertical pin) is a mechanical lock component, not an electric device.

B (Electromagnetic) locks typically require power to release and may not allow mechanical egress without integration.

D (Delayed egress) restricts exit temporarily, which may violate free egress rules depending on application.
