AACN Critical Care Nursing Exam Sample Questions (Q92-Q97):

NEW QUESTION # 92

An infant with tetralogy of fallot was admitted at the unit. Which of the following is indicative of physiologic adaptation of a client with tetralogy of fallot:

- A. shallow and irregular respirations.
- B. digital clubbing
- C. decrease platelet count
- D. ecchymoses

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation: There will be a poor peripheral circulation due to Hypoxia. Clubbing of fingers occur as a result of capillary development and tissue hypertrophy of the fingertips. There will be a rapid breathing.

NEW QUESTION # 93

What is the best method to ensure parents of a child with a new tracheostomy are adequately prepared for home care?

- A. Give the parents written instructions and answer their questions
- B. Demonstrate tracheostomy care daily and address the parent's concerns and questions thoroughly
- C. Provide the parents a video to watch and include them in ADL care
- D. Use the parents' preferred method of learning and evaluate as they perform care

Answer: D

Explanation:

Education must be individualized based on the parent's learning style and comprehension. Combining demonstration, return demonstration, written materials, and verbal teaching-as preferred by the family-ensures the greatest retention and competence. Ongoing evaluation of skills is essential before discharge.

"Use of preferred teaching methods, with return demonstration and skill validation, ensures family readiness for complex care like tracheostomy management." (Referenced from CCRN Pediatric - Professional Caring and Ethical Practice: Family-Centered Teaching and Discharge Readiness)

NEW QUESTION # 94

A teenage patient has an abrasion on her right forearm after a fall from a bicycle 3 days ago. The arm is cool, pale, and tight, capillary refill is greater than 5 seconds, and movement of her fingers is limited.

Which of the following should a nurse anticipate as the initial treatment?

- A. Fluid bolus and antibiotic administration
- B. Incisional fasciotomy
- C. Application of an immobilizing device
- D. X-ray of the right forearm

Answer: B

Explanation:

This clinical picture is classic for compartment syndrome: a surgical emergency. Symptoms include cool extremity, prolonged capillary refill, pain, paresthesia, and loss of motor function. Fasciotomy is the definitive treatment to relieve pressure and prevent permanent damage.

"Compartment syndrome requires immediate fasciotomy. Delay in intervention may lead to muscle necrosis and permanent disability." (Referenced from CCRN Pediatric - Direct Care: Musculoskeletal, Orthopedic Trauma and Emergencies)

NEW QUESTION # 95

When managing an abused child, the nurse should be aware that this child is most likely to do which of the following:

- A. Develop overly strong peer attachments.

- B. Seek assistance from teachers.
- C. Compensate by doing well in school.
- D. Develop aggressive behavior toward other children.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation: Because abused children see violence as an expected way of coping with life, they tend to develop aggressive behaviors toward other children. Many abused children fail to do well in school and are unable to compensate for their abused status. Many abused children have difficulty in establishing relationships, and those that are formed are usually superficial. Even though many abused children use attention-seeking behaviors toward their teachers, they are usually not seeking assistance, just attention.

NEW QUESTION # 96

A 3-month-old infant was brought back to the unit after a surgery for hypertrophic pyloric stenosis. The mother was very good in caring for the client but is reluctant with regard to feeding. Probably the mother is:

- A. not aware that her baby is allowed to resume feedings.
- B. uncertain if her baby can tolerate the thickened formula.
- C. afraid that her baby will vomit again.
- D. in doubt about the safety of the special nipple.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation: Past experiences with projectile vomiting are frightening. It is the responsibility of the nurse to explain that it will not happen again. No special nipple is needed in this situation.
