Salesforce Process Automation Accredited Professional Sample Questions (Q126-Q131):

NEW QUESTION # 126

What can a record variable store?

- A. A set of field values of multiple records that have the same object type.
- B. A set of field values of multiple records that have multiple object types.
- C. A set of field values for a single record that are not marked as Global.
- D. A set of field values for a single record.

Answer: D

Explanation:

A record variable in Salesforce Flow is used to store a set of field values for a single Salesforce record. This allows the flow to manipulate data for that record, such as retrieving data from the record or updating the record with new values. Record variables are specific to one object type and facilitate the handling of individual records within a flow. Reference: Salesforce Help - Work with Record Variables in Flow
