NEW QUESTION # 53

A Cortex XSIAM analyst is investigating a security incident involving a workstation after having deployed a Cortex XDR agent for 45 days. The incident details include the Cortex XDR Analytics Alert "Uncommon remote scheduled task creation." Which response will mitigate the threat?

- A. Revoke user access and conduct a user audit
- B. Allow list the processes to reduce alert noise.
- C. Prioritize blocking the source IP address to prevent further login attempts.
- D. Initiate the endpoint isolate action to contain the threat.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is A - Initiate the endpoint isolate action to contain the threat.

For incidents indicating possible remote compromise or unauthorized task creation, the most effective initial response is endpoint isolation. This cuts off the endpoint's network access, preventing lateral movement and limiting attacker activity until further investigation and remediation.

"The endpoint isolate action is the primary containment step in incidents involving suspected remote compromise, halting network communication to reduce further risk." Document Reference: XSIAM Analyst ILT Lab Guide.pdf Page: Page 40 (Incident Handling/SOC section)

NEW QUESTION # 54

An on-demand malware scan of a Windows workstation using the Cortex XDR agent is successful and detects three malicious files. An analyst attempts further investigation of the files by right-clicking on the scan result, selecting "Additional data," then "View related alerts," but no alerts are reported.

What is the reason for this outcome?

- A. The malicious files were true positives and were automatically quarantined from the scan results
- B. The malware scan action detects malicious files but does not generate alerts for them
- C. The malicious files are currently in an excluded directory in the Malware Profile
- D. The malicious files were false positives and were automatically removed from the scan results

Answer: B

Explanation:

The correct answer is B. The malware scan action detects malicious files but does not generate alerts for them.

In Cortex XSIAM and XDR, an on-demand malware scan effectively identifies malicious files on an endpoint. However, such scans typically record their findings directly in the scan results without generating separate alerts. Alerts are generally created through real-time protection mechanisms or detection rules, not through manually triggered scans.

Exact Reference from Official Document:

"The on-demand malware scan capability is designed to detect and identify malicious files but does not automatically generate alerts for those files. Alerts are primarily generated through real-time endpoint protection policies and detection rules." Therefore, the absence of alerts despite successful malware detection is due to the designed behavior of on-demand scans.

NEW QUESTION # 55
