Palo Alto Networks XSIAM Analyst Sample Questions (Q132-Q137):

NEW QUESTION # 132

While investigating an incident on the Incident Overview page, an analyst notices that the playbook encountered an error. Upon playbook work plan review, it is determined that the error was caused by a timeout. However, the analyst does not have the necessary permissions to fix or create a new playbook.

Given the critical nature of the incident, what can the analyst do to ensure the playbook continues executing the remaining steps?

- A. Pause the step with the error, thus automatically triggering the execution of the remaining steps.
- B. Navigate to the step where the error occurred and run the task again
- C. Contact TAC to resolve the task error, as the playbook cannot proceed without it
- D. Clone the playbook, remove the faulty step and run the new playbook to bypass the error

Answer: A

Explanation:

The correct answer isD - Pause the step with the error, thus automatically triggering the execution of the remaining steps.

When a playbook encounters an error and the analyst does not have permissions to modify or recreate the playbook, the recommended action is topausethe step with the error. This will skip the problematic step and allow the remaining steps of the playbook to execute, ensuring the investigation or response continues.

"Pausing a failed step in the playbook work plan allows the remaining steps to continue executing, useful when immediate playbook edits are not possible due to permission restrictions." Document Reference:XSIAM Analyst ILT Lab Guide.pdf Page:Page 39 (Automation section)

NEW QUESTION # 133

SCENARIO:

A security analyst has been assigned a ticket from the help desk stating that users are experiencing errors when attempting to open files on a specific network share. These errors state that the file format cannot be opened. IT has verified that the file server is online and functioning, but that all files have unusual extensions attached to them.

The security analyst reviews alerts within Cortex XSIAM and identifies malicious activity related to a possible ransomware attack on the file server. This incident is then escalated to the incident response team for further investigation.

Upon reviewing the incident, the responders confirm that ransomware was successfully executed on the file server. Other details of the attack are noted below:

* An unpatched vulnerability on an externally facing web server was exploited for initial access
* The attackers successfully used Mimikatz to dump sensitive credentials that were used for privilege escalation
* PowerShell was used on a Windows server for additional discovery, as well as lateral movement to other systems
* The attackers executed SystemBC RAT on multiple systems to maintain remote access
* Ransomware payload was downloaded on the file server via an external site "file io" QUESTION STATEMENT:

The incident responders are attempting to determine why Mimikatz was able to successfully run during the attack.

Which exploit protection profile in Cortex XSIAM should be reviewed to ensure it is configured with an Action Mode of Block?

- A. Operating System Exploit Protection
- B. Browser Exploits Protection
- C. Logical Exploits Protection
- D. Known Vulnerable Process Protection

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer isC - Known Vulnerable Process Protection.

Known Vulnerable Process Protectionin Cortex XSIAM is specifically designed to block or restrict execution of well-known attack tools and processes such asMimikatz. This profile allows you to enforce an Action Mode of "Block" to prevent such tools from running, even if they are executed as part of a privilege escalation or credential dumping attack.

"The Known Vulnerable Process Protection profile can be configured to block processes like Mimikatz, preventing credential dumping tools from running on protected endpoints." Document Reference:EDU-270c-10-lab-guide_02.docx (1).pdf Page:Page 16 (Malware and Exploit Profile Management section)
