NEW QUESTION # 96

A threat hunter discovers a true negative event from a zero-day exploit that is using privilege escalation to launch "Malware pdf.exe". Which XQL query will always show the correct user context used to launch "Malware pdf.exe"?

- A. `config case_sensitive = false | datamodel dataset = xdrdata | filter xdm.source.process.name = "Malware.pdf.exe" | fields xdm.target.user.username`
- B. `config case_sensitive = false | dataset = xdr_data | filter event_type = ENUM.PROCESS | filter action_process_image_name = "Malware.pdf.exe" | fields actor_process_username`
- C. `config case_sensitive = false | dataset = xdr_data | filter event_type = ENUM.PROCESS | filter action_process_image_name = "Malware.pdf.exe" | fields action_process_username`
- D. `config case_sensitive = false | dataset = xdr_data | filter event_type = ENUM.PROCESS | filter action_process_image_name = "Malware.pdf.exe" | fields causality_actor_effective_username`

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is A- the query using the field `causality_actor_effective_username`.

When analyzing events where privilege escalation is used, it is essential to identify the original effective user that initiated the causality chain, not merely the process's own running user (as provided by other fields). The `fieldcausality_actor_effective_username` specifically provides the effective username context of the actor behind the entire chain of actions that resulted in launching the suspicious executable.

Explanation of fields from Official Document:

* `causality_actor_effective_username`: This field indicates the original effective user who started the entire causality chain.

* `actor_process_username` and `action_process_username`: These fields indicate the immediate process username, not necessarily reflecting the correct original context when privilege escalation occurs.

Therefore, to always identify the correct user context in privilege escalation scenarios, option A is the verified correct answer.
